Contents

Foreword by David Omotoso Stovall xi

Introduction: The URM Student Experience in STEM 1

1 Will White Supremacy End America’s STEM Supremacy? 19
The Costs of Excluding People of Color from STEM Education • This Problem Is Greater and Graver Than Skin Deep • Scientists Agree That More Diversity Is Needed • URM Intellectual STEM Thought: They’ve Been There All Along • A Note on Research Methodologies

2 The Plight of the Underrepresented in STEM Higher Education and the Workforce 33
Spotlight on Engineering: Just How Underrepresented Are URMs? • Major Barriers to the Broad Participation of URM Students in STEM • The Burdens of Tokenism, Color Blindness, and Resilience • The Interplay of Color Blindness, Resilience, and Structural and Institutional Racism • The Financial Fallout from Structural Racism • Eugenics: The Pseudoscience That Refuses to Die • Looking Toward HBCUs for Guidance in Reversing Structural Racism in STEM • Faculty Overwhelmed by Service Work, Voluntary and Imposed

3 The Stress of Success for the Underrepresented and Minoritized in STEM 53
How Stereotyping Works • The Power of Stereotypes: Whatever Doesn’t Kill You Gives You Unhealthy Coping Mechanisms • Managing Stereotypes • Building Strong STEM Identities: Two Case Studies

4 Why Justice-Oriented STEM Is the Key to Getting and Keeping Students of Color in STEM and—Oh Yeah, Saving Our Planet Too! 75
The Equity Ethic as a Motivator for Marginalized Students • Roots of the Equity Ethic: A Common History of Suffering •
Table of Contents

5 Evaluating Efforts to Broaden STEM Participation

- Effective Educational Approaches for Underrepresented Students in STEM
- Programs That Work for STEM Students of Color
- Guiding Principles of URM Student Programs
- Why Is Mentoring Important?
- A Caution about Mentoring Programming
- Mentoring for the Underrepresented and Minoritized
- Clearing the Pathway to Diversified STEM Excellence

6 Next Steps for STEM Leadership: Practical Suggestions for Structural Change

- The Power of the University
- Conclusion

   Afterword: Who Am I to Be Writing a Book Like This?